

THACHER IS PUTTING UP WARM CAMPAIGN

of PLANT CELL WALLS

Congressional Candidate Plans to Tour From Provincetown to Brockton.

BROCKTON, Oct. 23.—Since receiving the nomination for Congress in the Fourteenth District, Thomas C. Thacher, of Yarmouth, has been busily engaged in campaigning over the entire district. In his touring car he has visited stores, homes, and factories in all parts of the territory. His further efforts will include rallies in Brockton and Taunton and in some of the large towns of the district. It is also pre-

If Judge Harris, the Republican candidate, resigns from the bench it is felt that Plymouth county is entitled to have his successor chosen from members of the local bar, and it is said that a well defined movement is being made in favor of George W. Weston of Middlebury, the present referee in bankruptcy in this district.

The attitude of William R. Buchanan, the Brooklyn publisher, who was Brockton's choice at the special election in last Spring, is still a matter of concern here. In the coming of the party, it is felt that Mr. Buchanan will be elected, and he will support the nominee of the Repub-

$5,000 PRIZES AT WORCESTER'S BIG CORN SHOW

First Exhibit of Kind in the East
Will Be Held From November 7 to 12

Can the New England farmer grow corn? The answer will be given in Worcester November 7 to 12, when the first corn show ever held in the East will take place on the grounds of the Worcester County Agricultural Society at Worcester.

The idea that all the good corn in the country is grown in Iowa, Illinois, Kansas and other States of the Central and Middle West will be disproven if the state needs made by New England farmers can be substantiated.

"Yes, the New England man is the only man who knew how to grow corn. He is the man who started raising corn in the Middle West. What the Middle Western farmers know about corn raising is what the New England farmer has taught him," says one prominent agriculturist.

Exports to Award Prizes.
While the New England farmer does not raise thousands of acres of corn in a single crop and does not raise thousands of bushels of his surplus, the show will be a show to raise corn and not prove that the New England farmer is not a corn grower.

One of the objects of the corn exhibition will be to show the corn of the Indian corn and other cereals to New England. While there is a fair crop of every year for local consumption in New England, this branch of agriculture is not carried on to the extent it should be, in the opinion of New England farmers. It is proposed by the corn exhibition to prove the advantage of corn-raising in this section just as the apple fair in Boston last year proved a tremendous stimulus to apple and fruit raising.

Twenty-five prizes will be awarded. All awards will be made by expert judges. No professional seed dealer, who is in receipt of any seed in bagging, shipping, or selling seed corn, grass, or other crops, will be allowed to enter in the competitive class. All exhibitors must have been born in New England by the exhibitor in 1909.

Rules for Exhibitors.
Entries for the exhibition closed on October 18 and will close on November 1. The committee anticipates. The exhibition of corn will be held in the National Corn Exposition at Worcester. This exhibition will be held in the National Corn Exposition at Worcester. This exhibition will be held in the National Corn Exposition at Worcester.

Is completely stocked with medicinal preparations of every kind, fresh from the laboratories where made, always in the best possible condition, and at the lowest prices.

In purchasing medicinal goods from us we do not have to run the danger of getting a lot of "cheap" goods, "inferior" and "just as good," etc. We have nothing of our kind to offer, and we want what you ask for.

We Do Not Attempt to Substitute

We Call Special Attention to Our Prescription Department

One of the largest prescription departments, if not the very largest, in Boston. None but qualified, registered men are allowed to compound prescriptions entrusted to us, only the very best quality of ingredients that money can buy are used, and we guarantee that every prescription left with us will be delivered to the customer in its good shape as time, skill and money can produce.

Our prices will be found very reasonable when the high quality of our ingredients is taken into consideration. Your prescription being in us to be filled and see what a difference fresh drugs will make.

Truss and Elastic Hosiery

This is completely stocked with everything needed in this line, has rooms for measuring and fitting, and is in charge of a registered M. D., who is well known to the medical profession as a skilled practitioner in the orthopedic line.

If you need a truss or an elastic bandage and are unable to call in person, write us to send you a measuring blank, as a truss, band or elastic stocking, to be worth anything, should be accurately fitted for each individual case.

MAYOR RAYS FOSS WILL RUN 12,000 AHEAD OF HIS VOTE

By Mayor Fitzgerald.

From the feeling which I know exists in Boston, Eugene N. Foss will get 12,000 more votes as the Democratic candidate for Governor than I received in my recent campaign for the mayoralty. Foss is a very capable man and will be a great asset to the city.

FOSS TELLS VOTERS WHERE HE STANDS

THE plain and imperative duty of the voters of Massachusetts is to retire Senator Henry Cabot Lodge to private life. He is a menace to the political progress and business development of the Commonwealth.—Eugene N. Fox.

asked to tell the Boston Sunday American just how he is going to conduct his campaign for Governor—what he is going to say to the voters, what suggestions he is going to make to them and what issues he is going to picture as being the most vital to them.—Eugene N. Fox "Before you vote study the issues; study the questions you think are the most important; study the arguments presented by the speakers on both sides and come to a conclusion through your own reasoning. Do not be influenced simply by partisanship.

Makes All Voters Think.

"I want to put my arguments as clearly and so plainly that they will set every voter to 'thinking.' I maintain that the Democratic platform should influence every Democrat, every independent voter and every progressive Republican in the State to vote for the Democratic ticket."

Candidate Foss arranges the issues of the campaign in their order of importance.

The adoption of the constitutional amendment permitting a Federal income tax "All the great men are appalled at the present state of public expenditure in the nation and in need of the States." It was the Republican party is chiefly responsible. Senator Aldrich, the recognized Republican leader, by his statement on the floor of the Senate, that the huge sum of three hundred million dollars a year could be saved by the application of sound business principles, has been unhesitatingly and unconditionally furnished the strongest possible indictment of the extravagance that has grown up under Republican administration.

Income Tax is Fair.
 "This feature of the platform cannot be repeated too often. The income tax is the fairest tax known. We are the only nation in the world that does not raise taxes on incomes. Our taxes are raised on the necessities of life which compel the poor man to pay more than his share and more than the rich man. Men of large wealth should pay the larger share and it is one of the glowing mistakes of the rich men of the Republican party, that they have not a national income tax."

"By our present system of taxation, we raise four times what is needed to run the government. A big share of the tax goes to the trusts and the corporations. Of course the costs of government have got to be paid, but the only fair way to raise these costs is by the Federal income tax."

"I am a regular election of United States Senator," was Mr. Fox's reply. "The United States Senate as it exists today is more aristocratic than the House of Representatives should be. It should be elected by the people and be answerable to the people instead of the 'electoral college'."

"Will you name in order the reforms you would like to see made?" asked the moderator.

"I cannot do that," replied Mr. Fox. "The Democratic platform is one of the best. I am a Democrat."

"What is a platform which must appeal to the great army of wage-workers, the laboring men?" asked the moderator.

"New take the cause of a national pre-reform party," replied Mr. Fox.

"What is a more important matter than the economic conditions which the government has to carry people. This is another of the most important questions which laborers have got to consider."

ROOSEVELT MAKES 4 SPEECHES FOR BASS

THEODORE ROOSEVELT went into the Kentucky hills, near New Hampshire, yesterday to aid Republican P. Bass, progressive Republican in his campaign for election as governor. He made four speeches, a short one at Lowell, and three at other places. At Manchester and Nashua, addressed crowded audiences for nearly an hour.

Roosevelt was made uncomfortable by occasional shiners. The crowds were not exceptionally large and he was not particularly popular in the country.

The special car of the Bass party, with Roosevelt as the guest left the North Station here at 8 A. M. About forty minutes later Mr. Roosevelt spoke to the passengers from the platform of the car to a few people who gathered at the station.

A crowd was forming about 11 o'clock. The car was a string of automobiles loaded the guests. Up through the aisle, Roosevelt, who was wearing a dark suit and a white shirt with a red tie, walked to the rear of the train and did not return.

Takes Up Mallen Statement.

A crowd of 2,500 pressed closely about the stand erected on the State House steps and listened to the ex-President for thirty minutes.

Mr. Roosevelt hurried to the Union Club. Dr. William R. Ingersoll at No. 54 Bowring street, where he spent the evening with his wife and his son Kerens, who was in Africa with him and who is now at Harare, came again. To-day the colonel will leave for the city from the South Station at 10 a. m. To-night he leaves New York for a tour.

J. W. KELLY QUILTS POLITICS

PORTSMOUTH, N. H., Oct. 26.—(U.S.) "I am through with politics for life," declared J. W. Kelly, attorney for the Boston & Maine Railroad, after he had won prominent political positions in New Hampshire today.

The announcement from Kelly, who has been active in politics since 1908, came about as great a surprise as if a football player had suddenly decided to become a doctor or a lawyer.

"I have nothing more to add," said Kelly, "but I will continue my party for office." (Earlier declared Mr. Kelly was not running for Congress.)

Kelly's decision to quit politics comes at the Republican nomination for Mayor of Portsmouth, and likely to secure it.

identically that opinion to be an admission that the road would lose revenue from which it has withdrawn its plans to withdraw from most of the states have accepted it. President Meilen said in a statement with every evidence of sincerity, but the attitude on the part of the railroad is due to the movement which is maintained in the language of Henry P. Rice.

"If the country felt to elect Mr. Meilen as president, it would be an admission to the world that the United States is a nation of slaves."

In considering his speech Mr. Roosevelt has subjected to President Meilen after the fashion:

respect to your platform that you will use every effort to do away with the pernicious activity of the railroad in politics. Mr. Mason ardently believed your plan. He said amen to your sentiments, but your action at the polls will determine whether or not he may decide to reverse his decision.

After dinner the party left for Manchester, N. H. and there, in the evening, he was in the front of the crowd that gathered in Merrimack square in the heart of Lowell. He was the first to be greeted by me and then by Mr. Brown, who was introduced by Mr. Bass, who, in the early afternoon, had been waiting the day to show himself, was cheered loudly and then he is at a table facing me.

He is a very pleasant, however, after a few references to the situation in New Hampshire, he turned to the subject of the

Pension Systems

"Chapter 550 of the acts of 1949 provided that employers and employees make contributory retirement plans, usually on a pension system, the authorization of which is subject to the approval of the state employers and their employees. The act also provided that the state authorize the establishment of a pension system for its employees."

The proposed pension system is the operation of an act relating to banks, insurance companies, and other corporations, and one which is set up and made effective by the state.

"I believe it is intended to be a contributory pension plan for the state and its employees, and I believe it is intended to be a contributory pension plan for the state and its employees."

Our impulsive sales each year have been a success. We invite every one to assist us in the celebration of this 27th birthday of ours in Boston. This, by the way, is the 65th year in business of our N. Y. stores. Our Souvenir Riker's Toilet Bouteille this year is particularly attractive. On Wednesday we open our Hot Soda Season officially, and every day thereafter a quart of our famous, except on Sundays, will be served with a cup of hot tea or a glass of cold chocolate free. Look over the special prices carefully; you'll find more rare opportunities.

1. The first step in the process is to identify the problem or issue that needs to be addressed. This involves gathering information and understanding the context of the problem.

MALDEN HIGH DOWNS
SOMERVILLE 12 TO 55000 Cheer Rival Schoolboys In Thrilling Gridiron
Battle for League Honors

Malden High practically clinched the Eastern League championship yesterday afternoon by defeating Somerville High school at the Broadway field, Somerville, by a score of 12 to 5. The Malden defense, although a little lighter than the home team, was superior at all points of the game.

More than 5000 fans and three thousand cheerleaders were present only to witness a game that was a real battle. Malden was down to defeat in the first half, but in the second half they came back and won. The game was a real battle, with both teams playing hard. Malden's defense was superior, and they were able to keep Somerville's offense from doing much damage. In the end, Malden won by a score of 12 to 5.

MOTOR TRUCKS THAT MADE FINE SHOWING IN AMERICAN TEST

ATLANTA, Ga., Dec. 22.—(Macon Telegraph.)—A circular letter, the purport of which was to call for the attendance of Newbern delegates to the Southern States' Convention, was received here today. The letter stated that the convention would be held at Newbern, N. C., on the 27th of December, and that the delegates from the Southern States were invited to attend. The letter also stated that the convention was called for the purpose of discussing the question of the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands.

A detailed black and white illustration of a vintage Buffalo Express delivery truck. The vehicle is a box truck with a large cargo area covered by a canvas top supported by several vertical poles. The front features a prominent radiator and headlights. The side of the cargo box is labeled "BUFFALO EXPRESS". The truck is equipped with large, spoked wheels and a steering wheel. The overall design is functional and typical of early 20th-century commercial vehicles.

3000 Pound Type, $2500

A black and white illustration of a vintage Mack truck, likely a Model 1919, shown from a side profile. The truck is carrying a large, rectangular wooden sign on its flatbed. The sign features the text "MACK TRUCKS" in large, bold letters, with "MACK" and "TRUCKS" stacked vertically. Below this, it says "MACK TRUCKS" again, followed by "MACK TRUCKS" in smaller letters. The truck has large spoked wheels and a prominent front grille. The license plate area on the front of the truck displays "MACK 1919". The overall style is that of a classic advertisement illustration.

That Device Is Best Which Procures the Greatest Service for the Greatest Number.
Thousands of Rapid Users Attest to Its Efficiency.

Detroit, Mich., Oct. 6th, 1910.
Gentlemen—Replying to your inquiry of Sept. 29th, regarding our experience with the Rapid Truck, which to say we have nothing but praise for this machine.

Since the first of April, when it went into commission, it has covered over 6,000 miles, and in all that time we had only two hours to take out an attachment in the Magneto, which we have since had removed. We regard the price paid for the truck returned to us in advertising alone. In regard to cost of maintenance, this is very nominal. We secure the truck has replaced three teams besides covering the ground three times as fast.

Yours very truly,
A. A. GRAY FERNHUT RECO.

Flint, Mich., Sept. 1, 1910

Rapids Sales Agency, Lansing, Mich.

Gentlemen—Today closes our first four months' operation of the one-ton Rapid Truck. We have driven our machine up to this time 27,500 miles. It is any wonder that we are pleased with the "Rapid" when formerly it cost us $40.00 per month to keep two horses and the extra man for the second wagon we had to pay $15 per week. We are saving with the Rapid easily $80.00 per month, to say nothing of the cost improvement in our service to our trade, which has shown an increase of 31 per cent. Since the installation of motor car delivery service, we have been waiting for you to ask for a testimonial letter, but we are so elated over the results we have had we take this liberty of inflicting upon you a word of praise unmodified and decidedly deserving.

Yours very truly,
ELINT PROVISION COMPANY,
E. F. Vagi.

Kramer, Ind., April 17, 1909.

Indianapolis Motor Car Co., Indianapolis, Ind.

Gentlemen—We have been operating three of the Rapid Motor Cars for over a year and we take great pleasure in stating that they have given us extremely satisfactory service. Before putting these buses into operation we were using eighteen horses for the purpose of transporting our guests between Madison and Attica, our railroad station, and we have made a saving of twenty-four hundred dollars in the operation of the automobile buses against that of the horses, not counting the betterment of the service which is worth a great deal of money to us.

Wishing you the success in your business which you deserve, we beg to remain,

Yours very truly,
INDIANA SPRINGS COMPANY,

International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, Gloucester, Mass., June 3, 1910.

Mr. I. B. Butler, Boston, Mass.

Dear Sir—After investigating several different commercial trucks on the market, I am satisfied that I have made no mistake in selecting the "Rapid."

It gives me great pleasure to inform you that my truck is doing great work. I have been in the express business in Gloucester, Mass., for thirty years and I never knew what comfort and pleasure there is in doing business until I became the owner of one of your "Rapid" Commercial Trucks, and much credit is due the manufacturers of the "Rapid" Motor Car in advancing the problem of rapid transportation.

I would recommend the "Rapid" to any prospective buyer, and will say that he will make a great mistake if he overlooks the "Rapid" when purchasing a truck to do business with. Wishing you success I beg to remain,

Very truly yours,
ANTOINE A. SILVA.

Cambria Steel Company, Works Office, Johnstown, Pa., Dec. 1, 1909.

Rapid Motor Vehicle Co., Pontiac, Mich.

Gentlemen—One of your 1-ton "Rapid" Trucks has been in hard service since last June, transferring freight between the various departments of the Cambria Steel Company.

I am pleased to say that it has displaced at least three heavy teams, and is maintained at about one-half their cost, to say nothing of the way the machine "gets there" in emergencies, when "time is money."

Any one doubting the efficiency, economy or adaptability of a Motor Truck for this class of work can find a valuable "pointer" right here.

Yours truly,
A. B. COOPER, Supt. Teams, Farms, etc.
Cambria Steel Co.

The "Rapid" Is "Built for Business."

In motor car building for commercial usage, as in every other kind of construction, the worthiest is the most economical. Economy condemns the weak and the inadequate as eventually necessitating tearing down and rebuilding or discarding entirely.

The truly economical Commercial Motor Car must be of the highest efficiency—meet the most exacting requirement.

There is no business where horses and wagons are used to haul goods, that cannot handle more goods in a more satisfactory manner and at a considerable saving, with a "RAPID" Commercial Motor Car.

This is a claim with merely a theory for its foundation; it is a fact established upon the sound basis of results.

At the present time "RAPID" Commercial Motor Cars are in use in a hundred different lines of business and in every case the "RAPID" is doing better work and more of it at smaller expense than the horse vehicles.

The "RAPID" has a larger number of satisfied users in the world than all other makes combined.

"Our Doubts Are Traitors and Make Us Lose the Good We Ought to Win by Fearing to Attempt."

Cleveland, O., Sept. 8, 1910.

Mr. J. W. Hartford, Mgr.

Detroit Omnibus Line Co., Detroit, Mich.

Dear Sir—My two-ton "Rapid" car has covered 6,055 miles since May 15th, 1910, averaging 52 miles per day for past 116 days. The car did not lose a single day during that period with exception of August 18, when rear tires were applied to wheels. Two hours lost out of 116 days.

Space and time will not permit me to write more at this time and I close recommending the "Rapid" to anyone who will properly take care of car by oiling and inspecting regularly, etc.

Very truly yours,

CHARLES L. MORLEY,
Moving and Baggage,
69 Auburndale Ave.

Denver, Colo., Dec. 30, 1909.

Rapid Motor Vehicle Co., Pontiac, Mich.

Gentlemen—The expense of our "Rapid" car—oil, gasoline, repairs, storage, in fact everything averages a little less than $45.00 per month. It has done the work of three teams more satisfactory than the teams could do. The man driving it worked for its seven years delivering goods with the team and wagon and had never driven in his life anything in the way of an automobile except the "Rapid" truck, beginning the first of April, 1908. The truck he is driving now we have had in service eighteen months. It is running as nice to-day, if not nicer, than it did during the first six months.

We are waiting anxiously now for the one-ton truck we have ordered from you and trust that we will surely get it before the first of February. We cannot say too much in favor of the Rapid Trucks.

Trusting you will make no delay, we are,

Respectfully,
THE DONALDSON & HOWARD COM. CO.

Ling Piano House, 42 Gratiot Ave., Detroit, Mich., Dec. 14, '09.
Rapid Motor Vehicle Co., Pontiac, Mich.

Gentlemen—This is our fourth year of handling pianos with a car of the Rapid Motor Vehicle Co.'s make. The car with a greater capacity secured last May is very satisfactory. We use it in depot work, city deliveries and long country runs, sometimes taking a load of pianos sixty to seventy miles, always with a pretty confident feeling that we will deliver the goods on time. Gasoline and oil consumption are surprisingly low and repairs have been no burden. With satisfactory conditions we can deliver twenty pianos in one day if we have them. Am glad to see that other dealers in my line have decided to do likewise.

Yours very truly,
J. HENRY LING.

Macon Coca-Cola Bottling Co., Exclusive Bottlers to the Trade, Macon, Ga., July 26, 1910.

Rapid Motor Vehicle Company, Pontiac, Mich.

Gentlemen—It is with pleasure that we advise you that we are operating 2 of your 1-ton Trucks now very satisfactorily. We had some trouble at first, in fact, quite a good deal, but found it was our fault, owing to our inability at the time to get a competent chauffeur, or one that would not run the trucks too fast. We find an average speed of 8 to 12 miles an hour very satisfactory.

Those two 1-ton Trucks are taking the place of 4 wagons and 2 salesmen at a cost less than the feed of horses, besides the saving of salary of 2 salesmen. We are getting out our goods more promptly to our customers and we believe the advertising feature of the Trucks is worth at least 25 per cent. of their cost. We will doubtless be in the market for 1 or 2 more later on. We are, with best wishes,

Yours truly,
HERBERT F. HALEY, Sec. and Treas.

Steelton Store Company, Limited, Steelton, Pa., Oct. 5, 1910.
Rapid Motor Vehicle Co., Pontiac, Michigan.

Gentlemen—Your favor of the 17th inst. received. The business of the Steelton Store Company, Limited, is Wholesale and Retail, and is called a Department Store. We use the "Rapid" Car for the Retail Department of our business, delivering packages from the grocery, meat, dry goods and men's clothing and shoe departments.

Have used a "Rapid" Car for three years and have five cars altogether of different makes, and when in need of a new car we selected the Rapid in preference to any other of which we had any knowledge.

Yours respectfully,

W. E. ABERCROMBIE, Supt.

The local "Rapid" dealers have been established in business for years, and are equipped to discuss this important phase of your business intelligently. Call them up to-day and get down to real economical facts. You will not regret it.

Save Your Effort for a Real Reward world, and that we have all the faults and foibles that we see in others. We can do very little straightening out the affairs of other men. Each man is more or less the keeper of his own fortune, the watchdog of his own success.

What we can do is to turn our attention to our own shortcomings—and when that is done astonishing progress will result.

To-day let us think for a little about the pathetic waste of human energy upon trifles—the stupid squandering of hours and days taken out of human lives and thrown away after objects that are of not the slightest consequence.

Few men save their best efforts for real rewards. Like the ponderous elephant, lifting many pounds of his vast body and moving it over the ground to get a single peanut that has no value to him as food and can but little more than tickle his palate for an instant, men give tons of real vital, valuable human energy in exchange for rewards that have no value and give no real satisfaction.

The pursuit of money for its own sake—for the useless luxury and the fictitious respect, it brings—has cost through the history of the world millions of lives, has destroyed unlimited happiness, has embroiled nations in wars and brought poverty upon thousands—and has never been worth the while to the pursuer.

The old man who sits gloating over his millions has gained power, perhaps, and notoriety. He has gained nothing else.

He has wasted a life that might have been of tremendous benefit to his fellow men chasing a peanut of a reward.

His talents, instead of bringing happiness to others and greater happiness to himself, have brought him only bitter envy and hatred. Broken in health and in heart, he sits clutching his money, in terror lest some thief take from him his only possession; in terror lest death whisk him into eternal darkness—yet afraid to live on and endure the sorrows that he has brought upon himself.

Often you see boys who are sent to college to equip them to earn their own living later spending all their real effort on making a football team or a college crew.

For this peanut honor they husband their strength, undergo the hardships of a training that keeps them far busier than could any amount of study, and work and think and plan day and night.

It would be fine and inspiring to see a youth practice self-denial, give up his bad habits and direct all his energies toward one object, if the object amounted to anything.

But to see an amount of time and thought and strength that would bring success in almost any field all squandered on a flimsy football reputation is pathetic.

Too often the boy finds when he leaves college and begins the real work of life that he has spent the best that was in him on the football field—that the little success he got there has "swelled his head" and made him worthless for the real game of life.

He has expended tons of energy for a fraction of an ounce of reward. Too late he learns that the game wasn't worth the candle.

The quest for "fame," which in itself amounts to nothing, has ruined many a useful career and wrecked many a life that might have been lived in peace and contentment.

To-day, when the country is baseball mad, thousands of boys who might be excellent blacksmiths and plumbers and carpenters—and there is a growing need for proficiency in all these crafts—spend their time playing ball, not merely for headlind exercise, but in the hope that if they keep on they may get a place on some "big league" team and share honors with the well known players who are constantly in the limelight.

Baseball is a fine game—and a bad calling. For every man who succeeds in it there are hundreds who throw away good chances to follow it, and who do not succeed.

At best the "fame" of a baseball player lasts but a few years, and if you were to question any of the men who now are talked of and cheered and praised by thousands of fans they would tell you that they would willingly exchange all their success and notoriety for a chance to begin life again in some profession that offered an opportunity for permanent success.

Yet probably as long as "Hans" Wagner and "Christy" Mathewson are heroes boys will run away from home to follow baseball teams. And long after both of these now famous gentlemen have retired and are earning their livings in more solid callings there will be the same ruin wrought among farmer boys and city boys by the glittering example of future baseball heroes.

Always the peanut reward attracts good energy. Always is the good energy utterly wasted.

The lure of the stage has drawn thousands of men and women capable of honest, useful careers from their natural vocations, and made of them indifferent or bad actors and actresses, gaining a precarious livelihood in poverty-stricken "road companies" or in the cheapest kind of variety shows.

To the matinee and schoolgirl the life of an actress seems to be the one life worth living.

Do Not, Like the Elephant in This Cartoon, Expend a Ton of Energy for a Fraction of an Ounce of Enjoyment.

Success, money, fame—all go with the calling of the star. How dull seems the drudgery of housework—how tame the vocation of a stenographer—how futile the highly honorable profession of teaching school beside the glories that are in the great actress' daily life!

So she leaves a comfortable home or deserts a well-paid position to "study for the stage."

A few years after, she wakes up to realize that only those who are unusually gifted by nature have the slightest chance of succeeding on the stage—and that even these have to do the hardest kind of hard work before their chance comes to them.

More human energy expended upon peanut rewards. More happiness ruined, more lives wrecked, or nearly wrecked, because of bad judgment in choosing an object that was both attainable and worth while.

Energy is the capital that men and women are given with which to engage in the business of life.

It ought to be well and carefully invested—used wisely and with attention.

Effort—continuous, well-directed effort—will win at least a competence. It may do far more, if there are few who are willing to exert it steadily and with their whole wills.

In this life there are real solid rewards—rewards that need not be waited for, but may be enjoyed as those that earn them go along.

Chiefly they come from serving others, from doing something that is useful, not only to I—but to others.

Invest your energy wisely. Use the income with judgment.

Do not try for rewards that are beyond you—do not try for rewards that are unworthy, like the peanut which our friend the elephant is so earnestly striving for in the cartoon that accompanies this editorial.

Form a purpose in life. Pick out the reward that you want, and spend all your working time trying to gain it. Be sure first that it is worth gaining; second, that it lies within your power to gain it.

Then give the best that is in you to its pursuit—taking care that your health is not sacrificed, and when your allotment of years shall have run out, although you may not be celebrated nor widely known, you will at least have the satisfaction that you have done with your talents all you can, and that the little corner of the world you occupy is a little better and brighter now than it was about to leave it than it was when you discovered it.

An amazing thing is human nature—an astonishing place is the world. Other people, their appearance, their actions, constantly astonish us. Because we can see them, and cannot see ourselves, we spend hours in wonder at what they do—never dreaming that undoubtedly they are as much amazed at us as we are at them.

The philosopher sees the billionaire thinking of nothing, dreaming of nothing, hoping for nothing but money, and is surprised that such a thing can be.

The philosopher views the philosopher sitting beside the road admiring a daisy, and is at a loss to understand how a human being can occupy himself with such a futile and purposeless pursuit.

"How you can follow a profession whose aim is to kill your fellow men is more than I can comprehend," says the lawyer to the soldier.

"How you can engage in a calling which thrives on the quarrels of other people is beyond me," retorts the soldier.

And the onlookers see these things and murmur in their bewilderment, "It is a strange world."

And it is a strange world—and we are all of us strange creatures, viewed from the unusual point of view of common sense.

When we stop and think of how men spend their entire lives chasing some foolish bubble; how they waste their energies in pursuit of some unsubstantial thing called pleasure; how they work and toil and suffer for rewards altogether inadequate, it seems a very strange world indeed.

And then we reflect that we ourselves are a part of this

WASHINGTON still hold anxious interest in the matter, and are waiting for news from the New York and other cities, where the most interesting inquiries are being made. The marriage was celebrated at 115th Street, New York, on the 11th inst., by Mr. and Mrs. George J. Feltz, who were attended by all the friends of the bride and groom. The bride was a daughter of Mr. Feltz, of Northampton, Pa., and the groom was a son of the same family. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Mr. Feltz, and the bride and groom were accompanied by a large number of friends. The wedding was a very quiet and intimate affair, and the guests were all members of the family. The bride and groom were both well known in the community, and the wedding was a very interesting event. Debutante of Yesterday Is the Charming Bride-Elect of To-day, and Bachelors Grow Fever.

THROUGH the ark of Autumn in pairs, there are still many numbers of brides who are yet to take the faithful trip to the altar and the roller of conjugal life. One of the most interesting wedding of the week to come will be Wednesday, when Miss Julia Helen Foster, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Foster, of 100 West Street, will be united in marriage with Mr. J. H. Foster, of 100 West Street. The wedding will be held at the home of the bride's mother, Mrs. J. H. Foster, at 100 West Street. The bride is a charming young woman, and the groom is a well-known bachelor. The wedding will be a grand affair, and the bride and groom will be the center of attraction. BRANCH NEMO FACTORY
STUTTGART, GERMANY
FOR THE EUROPEAN CONTINENT

Vol 1 NEW YORK, OCTOBER 23 1910 No. 10

DEAR MADAM:
Have you noticed how very little red dress is in most corset advertisements?

You find some general talk about "perfect figures," perhaps an effort to create a fashion atmosphere around an ordinary corset; or, still more, some faint attempt to imitate the Nemo; but not a word that tells you anything new—not even a helpful suggestion.

But this can't be avoided, for there is really nothing much to say about ordinary corsets. They are practically alike—copies of each other; no individual character or use.

It's different with Nemo. Every Nemo does something for you that you need to have done—and that no OTHER CORSET CAN DO.

Nemo is the ONLY corset for which there is NO SUBSTITUTE.

Our Lastikops Webbing Produces Entirely New Effects in Perfect ease and comfort.

Our great invention, Lastikops Webbing, enables us to produce wonderful new results in corset-making. Lastikops Webbing is firm enough to give complete support and long wear, but elastic enough to insure perfect ease and increased comfort. It is the only elastic fabric in existence that will "give out" in "letting," as all other elastic do; and all the limitations of Lastikops Webbing are just the same old unbreakable and disappointing figures.

For Tall Stout Figures

Nemo No. 405 ranks next to Nemo No. 522 in figure-reducing. Nemo No. 522 is the famous Relief Banda, and Nemo No. 405 is the famous Relief Banda. Both are made of Lastikops Webbing, and both are perfect for tall stout figures.

What Will Happen

TO THIS Artist Model?

(From the November "Cosmopolitan.")

VALERIE WEST, THE FASCINATING NEW GIBSON-CHAMBERS GIRL.

THE greatest of American novelists, Robert W. Chambers, and the greatest of American illustrators, Charles Dana Gibson, have united their pens and produced a new novel. This remarkable masterpiece of fiction is called "The Common Law," and the opening chapters are printed in the November number of the Cosmopolitan Magazine, just out.

The heroine of "The Common Law" is an artist's model, and the first installment, as printed in the Cosmopolitan, reveals a situation which is at once startling, pathetic, quivering with life, and instantly arouses the reader to the keenest curiosity and speculation as to the fate of this new and fascinating Gibson-Chambers girl.

From Robert W. Chambers' New Novel "The Common Law" Beginning in the November Cosmopolitan.

"Do you wish a model?" she asked in an unsteady voice. "Would you care to try me?"

"I'll take your name and address, anyhow. Come in anyway and rest."

He went over to an ornate Louis XV. table, picked up a notebook, motioned her to be seated, dropped into a chair himself, and began to sharpen a pencil. When he had achieved a point to his pencil, he opened his model book, looked up at her with his absent smile, and remained looking.

"Are you going to remove your will?"

"Oh—I beg your pardon!" Slender gloved fingers flew up, and were nervously busy a moment. She removed her veil and sat as to the face of this new and fascinating Gibson-Chambers girl.

The curtain of mystery which hangs in every artist's studio is drawn aside and the reader is permitted to peep behind the scenes. What will be the fate and destiny of pretty, trembling, audacious Valerie West, artist's model? By permission of the editor of the Cosmopolitan Magazine, we are enabled to print on this page today two of the drawings by Charles Dana Gibson and a brief portion of the first installment of "The Common Law" as it appears in the current number of the Cosmopolitan.

Waiting his comment. None came. After a moment's pause she said, "Did you wish my name and address?"

He nodded, still looking intently at her. "Yes, West," she said calmly.

He wrote it down. "Is that all? Just 'Miss West'?"

"A little West—if that is custom—necessary."

He wrote "Valerie West," and, as she gave it to him, he noted her address.

"Head and shoulders?" he asked quietly.

"Yes," she said confidently.

"Praped or undraped?"

When he looked up again, for an instant he thought her skin was whiter than it had been; perhaps not, for, except for the slight lips and a carnation tint in the cheeks, the snowy beauty of her face and neck had already preoccupied him.

"Do you pose undraped?" he repeated, interested.

"I expect to do—what is required of—models?"

"Sensible," he answered, and at the detail in his look.

There was something very good humored in his smile, and she strove to smile, too, but her calmness was now all forced and her heart was beating very fast, and her black-gloved fingers were closing and doubling till the hands that rested on the arms of the gilded antique chair lay tightly clenched.

He was leisurely writing in his notebook under her name: "Height, medium; eyes, a dark brown; hair, thick, lustrous and brown; head, unusually beautiful; throat and neck, perfect." He stopped writing, and lifted his eyes. How much of your time is taken ahead, I wonder?

"What?"

"How many engagements have you? Is your time all cut up—as I fancy it is?"

"Yes—no."

"Could you give me what time I might require?"

"I think so."

"What I mean, Miss West, is this, suppose that your figure is what I have an idea it is, could you give me a lot of time ahead?"

She remained silent so long that he had started to write "probably unreliable" under his notes; but, as his pencil began to move, her lips unfolded with a low, breathless sound that became a ghost of a voice.

"I will do what you require of me. I meant to answer."

"Do you mean that you are in a position to make a time contract with me, provided you prove to be what I need?"

She nodded uncertainly.

"I'm beginning the ceiling, lunette and panels for the Byzantine Theatre," he added, sterner stroking his short mustache, "and under these circumstances I suggest you know what a contract between us means?"

She nodded again, but in her eyes was bewilderment, and to her heart, fear. "Yes," she managed to say, "I think I understand."

"And you'll stand by me if our engagement goes through?"

"Yes, I will try to."

"Good business. Now, if you really are what I have an idea you are, I'll know pretty quick whether I can use you for the Byzantine job." He rose, walked over to a pair of closed folding doors, and opened them. "You can undress in there," he said. "I think you will find everything you need."

For a second she sat rigid, her black-gloved hands doubled, her eyes fastened on him as though fascinated. He had already turned and sauntered over to one of several easels, where he picked up the lump of charcoal in its silver foil.

"The light is fine now. Hadn't we better take advantage of it?"

She managed to find her footing; contrived to rise, to move with apparent self-possession toward the folding door.

"Better hurry," he said pleasantly. "If you're what I need we might start things now. I am all ready for the sort of figure I suspect you have."

She stepped inside the room and became desperately busy for a moment trying to close the door; but either her hands had suddenly become powerless or they shook too much; and when he turned, almost impatiently, from his easel to see what all that rattling meant, she shrank hastily aside into the room beyond, keeping out of his view.

The room was charming—not like the studio, but modern and fresh and dainty, with chintz and flowered wall paper and the graceful white furniture of a bedroom. There was a flowered screen there, too. Behind it stood a chair, and onto this she ing strength and ability on the part of the dancers. It is sensual in the extreme, and the productions will have to be chastened in certain respects before they can be presented on the American stage.

Three of these wonderful ballets produced in Paris are entitled "Scheherazade," "The Fire Bird" and "Circus."

"Scheherazade," by Leon Bakst, is perhaps the most remarkable. It is based on a story of "The Arabian Nights." As the curtain rises it shows the Shah and his brother Schariar telling one another stories of their domestic trouble. They pretend to go away to the country. As soon as they have gone the harem keepers, ruled by the wives, open a bronze door, whence spring forth negroes in bronze vestments. Then they open a silver door, whence come negroes dressed in silver. Finally they open a golden door and a gigantic negro dressed in gold steps forth. He is the particular favorite of the chief Sultana.

A wonderful orgy then begins. It gives a splendid opportunity for the peculiar talents of the Russian dancers. The marvellous Oriental costumes, designed by Bakst, which they wear, are shown on this page. When the orgy is at its height the Shah unexpectedly returns. All the minor offenders are massacred, and the fatal bowstring is handed to the Sultana.

The scenery is like brilliantly colored Persian pottery.

The scene of "Circus" is laid near an ancient Egyptian temple in an African oasis. Annon, a young lord, newly married, becomes enamored of Cleopatra. She smiles upon him for an evening. In the morning his young bride is seen endeavoring to restore life to his corpse.

"The Fire Bird" is a peculiarly Russian story. Ivan Tsarevitch sees one day a marvellous bird all gold and flames. He pursues it, but succeeds in tearing away only one of its brilliant feathers. He pursues it into the domain of Koshchei the Immortal, who is plotting to seize him and change him into stone. The daughters of Koshchei and the chaste princesses, his captives, intercede for Ivan in vain. At this moment the Fire Bird appears, and all the enchantments of Koshchei fall. The prisoners of the wizard, liberated, seize the precious golden apples of his garden.

America has already seen Anna Pavlova, one of the gifted members of the imperial troupe. Some of the other dancers are fully as remarkable as she is. Catherine Chellier is a great favorite of the Russians and of the Parisians, too. She is a very beautiful woman, as well as a wonderful dancer.

All the members of the Russian ballet are star dancers, capable of giving a solo performance if required.

AMERICAN HEIRESSSES! HERE IS A NEW MARKED DOWN KING (SLIGHTLY DAMAGED)

The list of fair women who have caused the downfall of kings and rulers has just been added. The name of Mademoiselle Gaby Deslys, of Paris, dancer and actress, is added. The list began even before India betrayed Sansar. It has been kept up to the present day and will go on for countless centuries to come, even a terrible Kings have caused to exist, for republicans officials are also human.

Mademoiselle Deslys is perhaps distinguished above all the others who have played historical roles as the most frivolous and playful of them all. She is everything but a historical character. Republicans all over the world must feel grateful to Mademoiselle Deslys for taking her "downfall" into their hands. When a king was a child, she would have been a playmate, and she would have been a playmate to the king's son. She would have been a playmate to the king's son. She would have been a playmate to the king's son.

What is the charm of Gaby Deslys? It has led King Manuel, of Portugal, to lose his great possession? This question is answered by the photographs which are printed on this page for the first time.

Here is the whole art of unscrupulous fascination told by the truthful camera.

One picture shows how to smile in an irresistibly bewitching manner. That smile draws a $50,000 necklace from a king. Observe the arch side-glance of the eye and the glimpse of pearly teeth.

Another picture explains how the eyes may be used to upset a throne. Wonderful power of the eyes! These are not what have been termed "eye-goggles," but swift, brilliant, intoxicating, lightning flashes of the eyes.

Mademoiselle has a very skillful dressing maid who makes her up perfectly from head to toe. Her face is touched up just sufficiently to give it its utmost brilliancy without leaving nature. The little king was ready to give up everything when he saw that artificially perfect face.

Observe how carefully all the subordinate details of dress are selected and put on. Note the coquetry of the lace, elegant yet not excessive. It is the art of the feet. Note the smoothness of the stockings and the reaction of the little toes. When the king was in the west pocket, they set Manuel's heart palpitating terribly.

The dancer is a marvel. No one could be so elegant and gay. When King Manuel saw her in her first act, he fell in love with her. He was ready to give up everything for her.

Examine a great many "useful hints" from Paris. They are drawn from these pictures, and so a lesson. Observe all these details carefully, and then consider. How you would like to be ruled and loved by a King, who was ruled by these things. That is one of the disadvantages of being governed by an irresponsible young man whom you do not choose and cannot remove even by a revolution.

Perhaps a superficial observer of these pictures will say that the great charm of Mlle. Deslys lies in the way she dresses, and in the way she moves. But there is much more than that. She has undoubtedly great quantities of expression, a winning smile that has a strong suggestion of the im-

Mlle. Deslys Putting on Ex-King Manuel's Pearls.

Young youth, her real lover, appears to beg her to come away with him. He does not do quite his best. He tries only three-quarters as hard as he can.

Just as a man who never takes violent exercise never uses the whole of his lungs, but has a reserve, so most people have a reserve of will power which they fall back on when they are ill and obliged to work notwithstanding.

It required illness to bring out the power. The man flew out of sorts, and realized that he must concentrate all his attention on his work if any good is to result, and the effect of the mental effort is a vast gain of will power, which naturally tends to produce good work.

Here Is Little Ex-King Manuel, and Four Extraordinary Photographs of the Intimate Home Life of His Charmer, Mlle. Deslys

The interior dressing room is visible and the dancer starts to change her clothes. The prospect of putting on the beautiful dress makes her feel that she has a reserve of will power which they fall back on when they are ill and obliged to work notwithstanding.

Then the street youth breaks in and covers the dancer and the beautiful yarder with his coat. After some more pantomime, the dancer persuades the youth to lower his pistol and finally goes away with him.

King Manuel gazed at the dancer with a will-eyed admiration during the whole of the evening. He does not do quite his best. He tries only three-quarters as hard as he can.

Why Your Best Brain Work Is Done When You're Ill.

By PHILIP OSTERMAN, M.D.

If you want to do your very best brain work don't keep yourself too fit. But remember, too, that the longer you work when you are really ill the greater will be the breakdown which must inevitably follow.

It is generally considered that a man who is physically fit necessarily does better brainwork than a man who is slightly out of color. This is by no means true. It is by no means true. It is by no means true.

But an increase of fever, or a man whose work requires a great deal of brain power, is capable better than a man in the best of health.

Of course I am not referring to cases of serious illness, but to cases where a man is "sickly," out of sorts, or possibly such conditions. When a man is "sickly," out of sorts, or possibly such conditions. When a man is "sickly," out of sorts, or possibly such conditions.

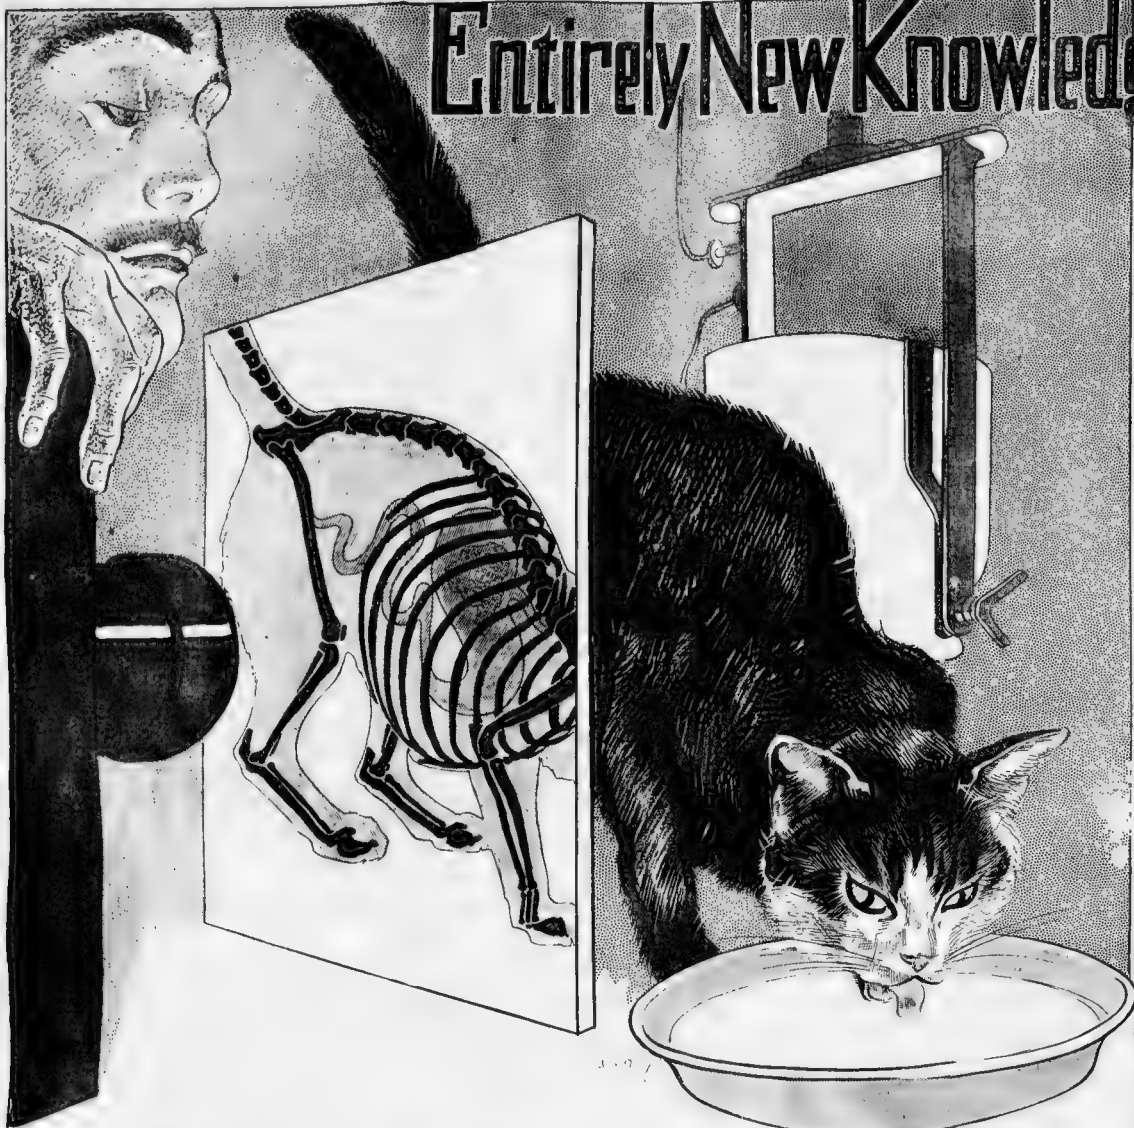

Let us suppose that the fever is not too high. Now fever invigorates the brain. It produces a flow of ideas. In the case of a man whose work requires a great deal of brain power, is capable better than a man in the best of health.

But an increase of fever, or a man whose work requires a great deal of brain power, is capable better than a man in the best of health.

How We Take X-Ray Moving Pictures of Your Stomach.

By Professor I. ROSENTHAL, of the Munich Royal Hospital.

WE have at last perfected an apparatus whereby moving pictures can be taken of the process of digestion in the stomach and the intestines. The apparatus is a combination of the X-ray machine and the cinematograph with some new features. Dr. C. K. Kautz and Professor Dr. H. H. Rieder have been associated with me in this study. We have named our process "biocinematography."

This machine gives us an exact picture of the method of digestion, the speed with which various substances are digested, and shows unmistakably the spot where any departure from the normal occurs. It cannot fail to be of great benefit to the vast mass of humanity that suffers from digestive trouble. Three years ago I succeeded for the first time in taking biocinematographic pictures of the stomach during a fraction of a second, thereby laying the foundation for cinematographic photographs of the active internal organs of the human body. These each single picture of the active moving organ is sharply and clearly defined, a successful cinematographic series is not obtainable.

The next problem to be solved was the necessity of changing the plates smoothly and with adequate rapidity. Care had to be exercised that each individual plate was immovable at the moment the photograph was taken, but was moved with the greatest possible speed before and after. The chief obstacle in obtaining this result was the size and weight of the plates. The third requirement for obtaining a perfect cinematographic Roentgen series was the absolute distinctness of each separate picture of the series, a result which it was possible to accomplish only by an exceptionally good Roentgen apparatus, as any inferior apparatus would have been unable to meet the heavy and rapid demands made upon it. This requirement also was met, and the three necessary conditions being attained, the art of biocinematography was established.

graphs of a simpler kind had been taken, as for instance of the action of muscles and joints, and of the movements of the heart and the diaphragm during respiration, attention was principally paid to the stomach, as very little is known as yet of the movements and actions of the stomach that are incidental to the process of digestion. The stomach, as everybody knows, is a narrow sac the lower end of which turns upward to the right. This upward turning part of the stomach, the so-called "antrum pylori," was until now believed to be a sort of suction and force pump, which by contracting, squirted the contents of the stomach into the intestines, and then expanding once more sucked in more food pulp, from the stomach proper, only to repeat the operation of forcing it into the intestines. This theory is exploded by the biocinematographic of the stomach, which show that in reality there is no separate "antrum pylori," but that this supposedly individual portion of the stomach is an integral portion of the whole, and gradually diminishing in size until each complete movement of the stomach, which is called a peristole, and lasts about twenty-two seconds, ultimately disappears altogether to be replaced by a new formation.

From about the centre of the full stomach there starts a well-defined wave which undulates to the lower orifice of the stomach, thereby continually causing new antrum formations, as it were, to appear and "disappear." The movement of the stomach during digestion is therefore not caused by a contraction and expansion of a localised antrum as was formerly supposed, but instead the walls of the stomach undulate incessantly, so that the stomach presents an ideal mixing machine. The biocinematographic of the stomach, moreover, demonstrates that during each peristole—that is, during every twenty-two seconds in the human subject—only an extremely small part of the contents of the antrum are forced into the intestines. By far the larger part of the food remains in the stomach and is churned again and again, so that to completely empty the stomach hundreds and thousands of undulations of the stomach walls are necessary.

Many important lessons have already been learned from this apparatus. First of all, cinematographic photographs were taken of a healthy stomach. The subject examined had eaten food impalpable to the Roentgen rays, so that the contents of the stomach were clearly distinct, cats, frogs, chickens, mice, rabbits and guinea pigs. Most interesting were the observations on cats and dogs, since these animals were much higher to the scale of intelligence than the other animals experimented on. It was very clear that anything which disturbed the higher animal's comfort tistinguishable on the photographic plate. In order to get a picture of the digestive action of the stomach, unmodified by the secondary movement occasioned by respiration, the patient was asked to suspend respiration while the stomach was quickly roentgenographed upon twelve plates by means of an especially prepared Roentgen apparatus. Thus twelve Roentgen plates were made in twenty-two seconds. The making of each plate therefore required only a small fraction of a second. The complete series afforded an extremely interesting study of the action of the stomach, entirely refuting many previously formulated theories.

To make comparisons possible a diseased stomach was selected as the test subject. Several physicians had declared themselves powerless to do anything for this patient. The biocinematographic Roentgen plates of this stomach showed that the undulations of the stomach abruptly ceased near the lower orifice, proving that some obstacle intervened. In connection with the examination it was possible by means of the biocinematographic of this stomach to diagnose cancer. The lay reader may not realise the value of an early diagnosis of cancer of the stomach. Only if the disease is diagnosed in time can the patient be saved. The disease is otherwise bound to be fatal. This one example suffices to illustrate the enormous value of this invention in the treatment of disease.

In any way retarded digestion, and that when he became angry it ceased altogether.

Our most remarkable discovery was that the stomach and digestive system of the frog when completely severed continued to digest food for two hours and forty minutes. This shows that the simpler the nervous system of an animal the less is the effect of sympathetic nervous impulses on the digestive functions. In this way we can realize how intimate must be the connection between digestion and the nervous system in the human subject.

We found that the pleasurable taste of food produced an immediate flow of gastric juice in the subject. We made an opening in the gullet of a dog so that food would escape through it before reaching the stomach. Food of very dairy quality was then given and the gastric juices immediately flowed, although no food reached the stomach.

Our next biocinematographic studies will be made upon the human being. Inasmuch as we have already succeeded in taking Roentgenographs of the human heart lasting less than one three-thousandths of a second the only difficulty that remains to be obtained is the sufficiently rapid changing of plates. We are now in taking Roentgenographs of the heart a materially greater number of plates per second are indispensable. We believe that we have now perfected apparatus to a point where this is possible.

DR. WALTER B. CANNON, professor of physiology in the Harvard Medical School, has just conducted a series of experiments, which give the world an entire knowledge of the process of digestion and function of the stomach and intestines. He watched and recorded the process in hundreds of men and animals aid of the X-ray apparatus. 1 He found that rhythmic contractions of the stomach occur only in that half of the pylorus, or entrance to the intestines. 2 In the pyloric and alone does the food come soaked with hydrochloric acid and other and the food remains as when it is lowered, and if it has been well chewed of of salivation continues. This is exactly reason why everybody should chew carefully. 3 He proved that an important part process of digestion went on in the stomach although most physicians to recent regarded it as a mere reservoir for food. 4 He found that the stomach is not affected by gravity. 5 He found that every kind of emotion produced an immediate effect on digestion. A cat stopped digesting altogether three hours simply because his fur was the wrong way. 6 He found that the digestion of food was less interrupted by irritating causes in that of male cats. There is reason to believe that females show the superior resistance to such causes. This would explain why a woman can go on digesting while four children are clamoring for her, the power of the door with his bill, two neighbors are to her up and down the dumb waiter and the organs, peddlers, etc. are heard in the room. A man would not digest under the same conditions.

In order to watch the action of the stomach food was given mixed with substrate which was opaque to the X-rays, and the food to throw shadows on the film screen.

Twelve tracings of the shape of the stomach.

How Emotions Affected the Cat's Digestion.

MANY recent experiments made by Professor Cannon of Harvard Medical School and other scientists have proved that every form of excitement has an immediate effect on the digestive secretions. Fear causes a complete failure of the secretions. Pleasant emotions generally facilitate the flow. Not only do the secretions cease in case of fear, but also the muscular movements of the stomach and intestines which are necessary to digestion.

In the large intestine the ordinary activity consists of an antiperistaltic motion or wave running forward toward the stomach. Just as soon as a cat was excited it was found that this motion ceased. It was then found that all digestive activities ceased—movements of the stomach, secretions of the small intestine and the antiperistaltic of the large intestine—all stop whenever the animals show signs of fear or distress or rage, or even of anxiety.

This observation first made on cats has been confirmed by experiments on guinea pigs, rabbits and dogs. "This," says Dr. Cannon, "shows the great importance of a quiet mind during the process of digestion. In my earliest observations on the movements of the stomach I had difficulty because in some animals the peristalsis was perfectly evident and in others there was no sign of activity. Several weeks passed before I discovered that this difference in response to the pressure of food in the stomach was associated with a difference of sex. The male cats were inactive and excited as being fastened to the holder, and under these circumstances gastric peristalsis was absent. The female cats, especially if elderly, submitted with calmness to the restraint, and in them digestive movements took their normal course."

Once a female with kittens, turned from her state of quiet contentment to one of apparent restless anxiety, the movements of the stomach immediately stopped, and only started again after the animal had been petted and had begun to purr. "I later found," says Dr. Cannon, "that the rats and mice with the fingers until a slight degree of breathing occurred, the stomach could be stopped at will. In the cat any sign of rage, or distress, or mere anxiety was accompanied by a total cessation of the movements of the stomach."

I have watched with the X-rays the stomach of a male cat for more than an hour during which there was not the slightest beginning of activity and yet the only visible indication of excitement in the animal was a continued loud trilling of the tail. "Who," the cat was stroked the right way during his meal and addressed as "Nice puss," the rhythmic contractions of his stomach proceeded with great regularity at the rate of one every twenty seconds, and the hydrochloric acid flowed freely as soon as pussy's coat was rubbed the wrong way the contractions of the stomach became slower and more irregular. When he displayed irritability by lashing his tail he stopped entirely. Digestion ceased altogether. Dr. Lommel of Germany found that small dogs amid strange surroundings would have no digestive action for two or three hours. Dr. Henshaw found that when his little boy chewed agreeable food a more or less active secretion of the gastric juice was started, whereas the chewing of indigestible material was without influence. Professor Pawlow, a pioneer in studying the workings of the stomach, asserted that the mere sight of food started the gastric juices, but his conclusions have been modified by the present observations.

Thus, Dr. Henshaw reports that a little patient of three and a half years, sometimes fell into such a passion in consequence of vain desire for food, but that the giving of the food after calming the child was not followed by any secretion of the gastric juice. Professor Pawlow experimented on hungry dogs, whereas Dr. Henshaw and Rogers' subjects were human, and the intervention of the human mind had an important influence on the results. The human digestion is far more subject to disturbance from mental causes than the cat's. There is no doubt, says Dr. Cannon, that the activity of the intestinal and stomach functions in man are stopped by fear, anxiety or any other emotion caused by an inhibitory impulse sent through the sympathetic nervous system. He quotes a curious case to show how worry may affect the digestion. A refined and cultivated woman living in the suburbs of Boston, came into the city to consult a specialist about some digestive trouble. Having eaten her last breakfast according to previous instructions she proceeded to the specialist's office in the morning.

He was astonished to find that the breakfast had not been digested at all, but lay stagnant in the stomach. He made inquiries and learned that the patient's husband had been the occasion of her coming to Boston to become disgracefully drunk, and that he had by the occasion given his wife a night of turbulent anxiety. This explained why the digestive processes had been entirely stopped.

The second morning after the woman had had a proper rest, the gastric contents were again examined. The process was found, and the rest breakfast had been normally digested.

An emotional disturbance affecting the alimentary canal is the easiest of starting a vicious circle. The stagnant food, especially if abundant gastric juice, naturally undergoes bacterial fermentation, with the formation of gases and irritant decomposition products. These in turn may produce inflammation or be absorbed into the system, and thus affect the mental state. The depressed mental state that accompanies indigestion may still further prolong the indigestion.

The meat is digested in the stomach and the carbohydrate in the intestines. Where meat was fed before cereal the meat delivered the normal progress of the cereal to the stomach. This indicates that cereals and meat, proceeded to the intestines much more rapidly than protein food, such as beef. The X-ray showed that water and cubic inches of water and the same bulk of lean beef was fed to two persons, at the end of two hours the maximum rate of discharge is reached after two hours, with meat only after four hours. The difference is largely due to the fact that water to protein food tends to make the discharge more rapid. When hard particles are present in the food the rate of exit from the stomach is notably retarded. Coarse, brown food leaves the stomach slightly faster than similar foods of finer texture. The pressure of gas in the stomach does prevent the walls of the stomach from exerting the normal mixing and propelling action on the food. No considerable variation from the normal rate of exit from the stomach is observed when the food is hot or very cold. Food with approximately normal acidity leaves the stomach faster than food which is more acid (1 per cent.), a result in harmony with other observations on the acid control of the pylorus. Deep and rapid peristalsis of the pylorus has very slight influence on the passage of food through the pylorus. One observation that should not be missed is that as little as possible with water or other liquid, on cases that the food is passed to the stomach to the intestines, which are not able to digest it.

My New "Inside-Outside" Gown.

Lady Duff-Gordon's
"Double Decker" Gown—

LADY DUFF-GORDON, the famous "Lucile" of London, and foremost fashion creator of the world, writes each week the fashion page for this newspaper, illustrating it with photographs or sketches of her own exclusive London and New York models. Lady Duff-Gordon this week describes her newest creation, the "Surprise," a "double-decker" gown, invented by "Lucile" especially for American women. Here she tells of this astonishing new dress.

Lady Duff-Gordon's American establishment is at No. 17 West Thirty-sixth street.

"And calmly takes the skirt off in the restaurant."

lily-like motif of brocade and braid which finishes and fastens the coat in front being also in black. There are many ball buttons, too, of entwined silk cord and braid set closely together on the sleeves, and again at either side of the coat at the back where in the centre another of square-shaped medallion of braid. The length of the coat made it especially protective and becoming, too, and as it has a second, and invisible, fastening low down at one side in front, it is still held closely about the figure, even when it is thrown open at the neck. And then you get your first surprise, for, in contrast to its outer simplicity, it then reveals inner fancies of dead rose satin, which at the left side are bordered in dull crystal silver and gold, and silks whose soft shadings lead on to the definite and yet delicate mauve of the brocade that forms a final bordering, and is patterned with blurred roses of dead gold, the two metallic tissues being finally brought together at the edge. On the other side there are just two narrow folds of the brocade, set against the faintly rose-hued satin and contrasted with a mere edge of black fur. The skirt, as seen beneath it, is just a simple closely clinging shape in the same "rattier" cloth, fastening all down the left side with the ball buttons and braided hooks, the completing items for the toilette being last suggested by the photograph, and consisting of a great flat pillow muff of Persian lamb and a black velvet hat, surrounded by a veritable hedge of black egrettes.

Next stage—the coat removed and the dress revealed to show above the cloth. A Russian tunic effect of dead leaf-brown linen whose soft transparency moulded in seamless curves over the shoulders gives just an alluring suggestion of the inner delicateness of fresh. Pink ribbon, a row of bow-ties, and inter-threaded shadings of faintest rose, halcyon, flamingo, and the rest of a rich and subtle palette. The brocade of a red and silver is a charming set of pink pink shadings, the lower portion beneath being in its turn edged with a band of the soft pink and a metallic brocade, whose shimmering scrolls surround occasional apertures of old rose velvet. The cloth here continued in a central band all down the tunic, it there bearing the burden of quays black braid buttons and bone. Finally, folded above the waist is a wash band of the mauve and gold brocade, its ends fringed with silver and gold, while massed embroideries of the two metals further adorn the front of the band.

But there is still another stage in the series of surprises, for now, do you wish for still more coolness and charm, you can, with a mere touch, undo the red fastenings of the pink overcoat and then stand revealed in a dainty dress entirely fashioned of the soft brown linen underlined with faintest pink ribbon, on which narrow bands of ever classic and brocade flourishes of live are faintly visible. Some bands of ribbon, drawn out into flat bows, being threaded beneath these transparent folds of lace. At the left side the opening folds of the skirt are bordered with dull gold tissue, and a band of the cloth, this latter and finer fabric hiding it in about the feet.

So how you know all about my "Surprise," and I hope that it may solve the Winter dress difficulty for a good many of you this season.

Another item of fashion news which I pass on to you as likely to be of interest is the somewhat startling but certainly very effective use of grays as a trimming for cloth coat and skirt costumes and long wraps of seal skin. There is likely to be something approaching a new among smart women to first display this very latest form of trimmer, and as it is used on the most elegant of cloth costumes is fortunate, as it provides opportunity for its immediate wear. A white cloth coat and skirt adorned with just a discreet touch or two of silver, brown, and even proudly displaying a roll of collar of the beautifully glossy white grays with its touches of golden brown is one such new creation which is destined to create a sensation on its first, and indeed, on all subsequent, appearances. The skirt, too, is finished off with a deep band of grays and in order to make its novelties somewhat more comfortable when its wearer attempts to walk, it is cut up to a depth of two inches both at the back and in the front. Which is truly a most welcome change from the once fashionable and most hideous scheme of tying in the skirt still more closely about the feet.

Then on a seal wrapped coat the grays will form a great shawl collar, tapering to a point far below the waist line, the lining in its turn further proclaiming this to be one of the latest and smartest creations of a season that is going to establish a record in the way of beautiful furs.

By Lady Duff-Gordon "Lucile"

I HAVE a real surprise for you this week—a pleasant one, too, I hope you will consider it, and one with which, if it interests you, it will be possible for you, in your turn, to surprise all your friends. You can from the first, too, take a sort of proprietary pride in whatever success it achieves, for America provided the inspiration for the idea, and the costume (for, yes, the "surprise" is question is nothing more nor less than a new dress model) which, therefore, I dedicate herewith to the American women in general and the feminine and fashionable residents of New York in particular.

For well I know how difficult it has always been—and always seemed likely to be—in so arrange one's attire for the Winter months as to be equally comfortable and smart when facing the cold outdoors and when suddenly transported into the hot-house temperature of the American home and hotel. Such a transition is apt to be somewhat dangerous to the health, and still more often to the delicacy of the complexion, and so, in order that, in the one costume, you may enjoy all the warmth you need when taking your walks and drives abroad, and may moreover be delightfully cool and comfortable from the first moment of our entry into the most heated and crowded room—I have evolved for you that "surprise" costume, whose arrangement I now propose to reveal to you by a series of photographs and some few words of description.

First of all, then, permit me to introduce to you the "Surprise" in its complete and cozy aspect for chilly weather wear out of doors. The colors of this particular model being, of course, capable of many variations to suit individual requirements—and complexion—though for those which I have thus arranged, I must confess to a special partiality, and further point out that they will prove almost universally becoming and serviceable, too, as well as warm, artistic, efficient, and attractive. For material I have used the new "rattier" cloth, which is really a ideal for Winter tailor. This I made, seeing that it is of almost flameless texture and heavy, its texture, indeed, suggesting a blending of blanket cloth and the old fashioned pilot cloth of overhauling wear. Dead leaf brown is its color, and this is set off by a collar of silky black Persian lamb, the
